2018

From November to July, our vines received the equivalent of a year of rain which favored diseases if the vinegrower didn't keep a close eye on his vineyard. Fortunately the summer was very sunny which enabled the grapes to mature harmoniously. In September, scarce rain was welcome to end maturation. Fresh nights and warm days concentrated aromas and phenolics. However, parts of the Bordeaux vineyard were hit by hail. Fortunately, Bouscaut was spared.

At Bouscaut the clay on limestone terroir kept the water it had received during more than six months and was able to redistribute it during the summer drought. Red grapes wore small berries with thick skins which were very mature as were the seeds. At the end, the red wine shows elegant round and firm tannins. The whites, unveil a round body and good freshness in spite of the dry summer.
